

1. Familiarity + Notification

Opener:

"Hey [Client], this is [Your Name] — I'm calling regarding the loan you closed with [Lender] in [year]. At the time you mentioned you wanted a call when the rates dropped. Well, that's exactly why I'm calling today."

The Hook:

"We got a notification on [Property Address] — your rate is sitting in the high 6s, and rates have come down significantly since then."

The Close:

"Let me ask you this: what would benefit you more right now — lowering that monthly payment, or pulling out some of the equity in the home?"

Why it works: Callback promise gives you permission to be on the phone. Specific property data builds instant credibility. Ends on a binary question, not a yes/no.

2. Priority Flag + Mirror

Before You Speak:

[SMILE] [Mirror their first words] "[Name]?"

Opener:

"Hey [Name], this is [Your Name] I'm calling regarding the loan you closed with [Lender] in [year]. Quick update: your file came up on our priority tracking for a savings incentive."

The Close:

"When you got your mortgage back in [year], rates were much higher than they are today. If you could change one thing about your mortgage right now, what would it be — a lower monthly payment, access to your equity, or shortening the term to pay the home off quicker?"

Why it works: Priority flag creates urgency without overpromising. The three-option question keeps them talking instead of shutting you down.

3. Objection-Proof Opener

Opener:

"Hey [Name], it's [Your Name] — I'm calling regarding the loan you closed with [Lender] in [year]."

The Hook:

"I don't know if you're aware, but your interest rate on [Property Address] is sitting at [rate]. I was just looking over the market and it has shifted in the past few days to well below that."

The Close:

"Is there a reason you haven't refinanced yet? Is it credit, missed mortgage payments, or just haven't gotten around to it?"

Why it works: Surfaces the objection in the first 30 seconds instead of chasing it ten minutes in. You find out fast whether this is a real deal.

4. Brand Promise + Incentive Stack

Opener:

"Hey [Client], hope all has been well. This is [Your Name] — I'm calling regarding the refinance you closed with [Lender] in [year]. At the time, you were told someone would reach back out if rates improved or better pricing became available. That's exactly why I'm calling today."

The Close:

"Let me ask you this — regarding [Property Address], what would benefit you more right now: lowering your monthly payment, or seeing what home equity options may be available to you?"

Lock Urgency:

"My goal is to get you a locked loan estimate today, in case rates change and go up on us. I just need to ask you a few questions and get a few documents from you to start the process."

Why it works: Keeps the familiarity script that is already your best performer, then bolts the incentive stack and lock urgency onto the back end to drive the appointment.

5. Market Shift + Dollar Amount

Opener:

"Hi Mr./Mrs. [Name], this is [Your Name] — I'm calling regarding the loan you closed with [Lender] in [year]. Hope all has been well."

The Hook:

"I was just taking a look over the market — it has shifted in the past few days and it's much lower than what I'm seeing that you currently have. Rates have dropped enough that you'd be looking at saving somewhere between $300 and $400 a month on your mortgage payment."

The Close:

"Would that benefit you a lot right now?"

Why it works: A concrete dollar figure converts better than "rates dropped." People do not act on percentages — they act on payment.

Universal Rules — Every Intro

How You Open

1. Open by referencing the loan they closed with [Lender] in [year]. Never claim you closed it, and never present yourself as the lender or servicer.
2. Say your first and last name and that you are a licensed mortgage broker. If they ask who you are with, answer straight — no dodging.
3. Name the property address or the year they closed within the first two sentences. Specifics beat generalities every time.

How You Ask

4. Never end on a yes/no question. Always give two or three options.
5. Pause one full second after the closing question. Let them fill the silence — do not talk over your own close.
6. Ask one question at a time, then stop. Stacked questions get you a one-word answer.

What You Promise

7. Quote ranges, never guarantees. "You could be looking at" — not "I can get you."
8. Incentives are subject to approval and program eligibility. Say so out loud if you name them.
9. If they ask a question you do not know the answer to, say you will find out and call back. Do not fill the gap.

Where You Are Going

10. Get to the incentive stack before the qualifying questions.
11. Your goal on this call is a locked loan estimate — not a callback.
12. If they say stop calling, mark it and stop. That is a do-not-call request, not an objection to handle.

Tone Is Everything

The words on this page are maybe a third of the call. The other two thirds is how you sound saying them. Same script, wrong tone, dead call.

Sound Like a Person, Not a Pitch

Smile before you dial — it changes your voice, and they hear it. Mirror their first words back word for word, and match their pace. If they are slow and measured, slow down. If they are quick, pick it up. People trust voices that sound like their own.

Calm Beats Excited

Urgency in your voice reads as commission breath. Deliver the rate news like you are telling a neighbor something useful — not like you are closing them. The calmer you are about the savings, the more real the savings sound.

Drop Your Pitch at the End

Statements go down at the end. Questions go up. If your statements go up, you sound unsure and they will hear it as a script. Land your sentences.

Silence Is Your Best Tool

After the closing question, stop talking. Count one full second in your head. Whoever speaks first loses the point — and most reps lose it by filling their own silence.

Never Get Sharp

If they are short with you, stay warm. If they push back, acknowledge it before you answer — "fair enough" or "I hear you" — then continue. Matching their frustration ends the call. Absorbing it keeps you on the phone.

Read the Room and Let Go

Not every lead is a deal today. If it is clearly a no, thank them, leave the door open, and get off the phone clean. A polite exit today is a callback in six months. A pushy exit is a complaint.
